

Too many of these lads have to get by on a dime or two when their luck's out. And after all, they've got to eat."

She walked to the receiving barn when Cephus led Countess Q over and then wandered into the Turf club to inspect the luxurious fittings that seemed to the girl, brought up on half-mile tracks and wooden stands, to more nearly approximate a luxury hotel than a place where people gathered by the thousands to watch horses run.

EVEN THE CROWD was different than she had been accustomed to. Cheap tinhorn gamblers, touts, hangers-on with patches in their pants were conspicuously absent. Rather, it was a fashionable crowd one might expect at a society horse show or a polo game on Long Island.

Although the outer trappings were entirely different from anything she ever had seen, it was still just a race track she decided as the horses paraded for the first event and she felt the old thrill of excitement as she watched the thoroughbreds, taut as drum heads, skitter and prance up to the starting gate led by a man on a piebald pany and wearing white breeches and a red coat.

She scanned her program, but saw none of the old names of owners or horses she had been familiar with in the east. Which wasn't entirely surprising.

The pact was a little too swift for the gypsies she had known and most of the horses she remembered probably had died of old age long since.

main army in China. Their supply line from Tokyo to Port Darwin, Australia, would run approximately 2,800 miles long. The farther they go the more supply ships they will need to sustain themselves.

EVEN WITH the main Jap fleet hiding at home, the toll of fighting ships is beginning to mount. United Nations claim to have put out of action four stray battle-ships of an estimated 18 (it may be more) in the Jap fleet. Only two were sunk, two damaged.

Jap loss in aircraft carriers has run higher than you would think, with half her estimated strength put out of action (three sunk, two damaged).

Cruisers and destroyers are types she must have to protect her supply convoys. We claim 17 cruisers sunk; 27 damaged, or a total of 44 out of action. (She is reputed to have only 56, but she probably has more). Of her estimated strength of 136 destroyers, 22 are claimed sunk, 12 damaged, or a total of 34.

In submarines, her losses have been light, 10 sunk and 2 damaged out of estimated strength of 78. Sub losses, however, are difficult to calculate accurately, and no doubt she has lost more than claimed.

WHEN YOU add it all up, the dismal setback we suffered in the Java sea fleet of 12 fighting ships
